“A method for extraction of powdered silk fibroin from Bombyx Mori cocoons using aqueous solution of basic ionic liquid”.

C08J3/14 & A61K38/17.

143493

A novel method for extraction of fine silk fibroin powder from Bombyx moori silk cocoons is disclosed. The conventional method of silk processing includes dissolution of the degummed silk fibers in some strong salt solutions followed by a dialysis step. The earlier reported strong salt solutions have either associated environment issues or lower dissolution ability for silk. However, the provided method comprises of degumming silk cocoons, drying and cutting the degummed silk fibers, mixing the fibers with one of the provided ionic liquid, stirring the mixture, regeneration of silk from the mixture with the help of methanol as antisolvent followed by centrifugation, drying the precipitated silk and finally obtained the fine powder of silk.
